PARIS NOTES.

Street Signs-Use of Horse Meat-Dr. Doyen and Cancer.

Paris, July 19. You are far and away ahead of us in the matter of street signs," was the remark made to the writer a few days ago by a United States Senator from Massachusetts. Indeed, the next, legible white letters on blue enamel which at every corner clearly indicate the name of the street and the number of the arrondissement or ward elicit frequent approvat from Americans visiting Paris, together with the regretful comment: "Why in the world can we not have something of the same kind in New-York, or in Boston, or in Philadelphia?" This week a further improvement in the matter of street signs is to be put into practice by way of experiment, and if approved by the public will be definitely adopted for January, by the plates will be illuminated by simply lighting the street lamps. These plates only cost five cents each; the expense of putting them up is practi-

The writer called upon Dr. council, where it was eagerly supported by Dr. Paul Brousse, the wideawake President of the Piccini, and was received by Dr. Doyen in his Municipality of Paris. The transparent signs were fitted up for the first time last night in tions that morning before breakfast. He was the Rue Henry-Monnier, to the great delight of in white linen overalls and jacket, and wore his the residents of the Saint-Georges quarter of large india rubber apron. He repeated that he Paris, which thus finds an additional justifica- felt more confident than ever in his method of tion of the title of "la Ville Lumière." Another practical feature of Paris streets that never fails to attract the attention of Americans is the sensible way in which the houses are num- that in October next, at the Surgical Congress, bered. In the first place, all the house numbers, not only in Paris, but in every town in drawn up by Dr. Delbet. "Moreover," remarked France, are of the same model, color and dimensions-neat Arabic numerals, in white enamel, on a blue enamelled plate. In each port is that in a few more weeks all my cancer street all the odd numbers are on the left hand patients will be dead. If those who survive this side of the street and all the even numbers are on the right. In Paris the streets that are parallel, or approximately so, with the Seine most of them will be much better than they are have the number "I" at the end of the street now), they will furnish excellent evidence of the furthest "up stream." The street numbers thus, efficacy of my treatment." run with the Seine. Streets at right angles with the Seine have their number "1" at the end of the street nearest the Seine. In this way the stranger can readily estimate at what part of the street he can find any given number. This is particularly convenient for cab drivers, and saves much time, inquiry and use-

The rapid development of Paris butcher shops that sell horse meat causes surprise among American visitors, not always mingled with admiration. Almost every quarter in Paris is now provided with two or more horse butchers. The municipal slaughter house, used exclusively for horses, erected three years ago in the Vaugirard district of Paris, is doing a most flourishing business. On an average 250 horses a day have been slaughtered there since June 1. The animals are carefully inspected by veterinary surgeons before being killed. This inspec tion is extremely thorough, owing to the fact that a few weeks ago a workman near Lille was attacked with glanders, attributed to his having eaten for dinner a roast rib of an old mare that had died from glanders. The horses brought to the Vaugirard slaughter house are mostly broken down cab horses, and fetch prices varying from $12 to $16 apiece. Most of the dainty, tasteful. little, dark colored sausages that American tourists so freely partake of as a sort of appetizer at the beginning of their repasts at hotels or restaurants consist of horse meat. The horse meat used for sausages is usually taken from the oldest animals, and, after being pounded. compressed, and duly salted, finds its way to the most fashionable restaurants, and is in spenand at the buffets of the railway stations, where, attractively presented in neat, thin slices beside pieces of bread and butter, it is consumed in prodigious quantities by American and other travellers, some of whom would be astonished to learn that they had partaken of horse meat-for even the keenest horse eaters admit that considerable prejudice and repugnance still prevail against the consumption of the flesh of the "noblest conquest of man."

A venerable woman from Brooklyn and her young daughter were a few days ago seated at the buffet of the Rouen railway station. They had landed from the French steamer at Havre, and were making the trip through Normandy to Paris for the first time. "Oh, mamma! are not these little sausages simply delicious!" was the young woman's remark. "Yes, my dear, it will be a good plan to buy a basket of them for our supper." They did so, and after they had eaten two or three pounds of horseflesh a fellow traveller casually observed: "You are quite right in preferring those sausages to the ones that are made of pork. Horse meat is more wholesome, and, especially in summer, is less heating than ham or beef." The Brooklyn woman and her daughter held up their hands in borrer. They turned pale, and a flask of brandy had to be called into use to avoid a fainting fit.

Owing to the case of glanders reported from Lille, and in view of the steady increase in the consumption of horse meat as daily food, the opinions of several prominent members of the Paris Faculty of Medicine have been communicated to French newspapers. Dr. Debove, dean of the faculty, says: "I don't think that horse meat is as nutritious as beef. It has a taste of sugar that is not disagreeable to the palate, but the principal elements of meat that supply the taste are the fat and the blood. The fat of horse meat has a most unpleasant smell and flavor of the stable. I have frequently eaten horse flesh in order to study it. I find that whenever a pot-au-feu, or stew, of horse flesh is made there is a most unpleasant odor of the stable. Another inconvenience is that glanders can readily be communicated to human beings by tainted horse meat. My opinion is that cheapness is the only superiority of horse meat over beef, and that if horse meat were sold at the same price as beef no one would buy it."

Dr. Edmond Perrier, member of the Institute and director of the Cuvier Museum, said: "I have no hesitation in declaring that in my opinion horse meat is on the whole more wholesome

Dr. Delbet stated in his report that in the course of six months he examined the twenty-six cancer patients treated by Dr. Doyen. Dr. Delbet says that of these twenty-six patients twenty were made worse by the injection of Dr. Doyen's anticancer serum. The committee reports that it was unable to discover the existence of the bacillus of cancer called by Dr. Doyen the "micrococcus neoformans," and the conclusions are that "Dr. Doyen's method has no efficacious result in the treatment of cancer." Meanwhile, Professor Metchnikoff, of the Pasteur Institute Dr. Blondel, of the Sorbonne; Dr. Toupet and other high authorities believe in the existence of the famous "micrococcus neoformans." Doyen was present at the public meeting of the surgical committee, whose conclusions were so unfavorable to his investigations. Not being a municipal council. CHILDREN AT UTICA.

Many Parties Near There Gaining Health and Pleasure.

From The Utica Globe.

From The Utica Globe.

With the unhealthy pailor of the tenement on their faces, which bear the sharp, shrewd look of the children of Now-York slums, a large party of little boys and girls emerged from a train in this city two weeks ago. They were "fresh air" children, sent by the Tribune Fresh Air Fund to Utica for a two weeks outing. They were received by the Rev Dana W. Bigelow and the kind hearted Utica women who assist him, and sent into the country. To many of the children the beautiful rural scenery of Cheida County was a revelation. Most of them had never before been outside of New-York, and the finely shaded roadways, the flower bedecked fields and stately forests were to them a constant source of wonder and delight. Great was the change wrought by their outing. The julior of their faces had given way to a healthy tan. From their eyes had gone the appealing look, and in its place was the trank, happy glunce of the healthy child. They had enjoyed every moment of their stay, and not only were they benefited physically, but mentally and morally they had been greatly improved by their healthful and lappy surroundings. Thus every year is this most practical and pleasing of all charities repeated.

The Fresh Air Fund in Utica and its vicinity is just now near the close of the tenth year of its ministry in arranging for summer outings for children from the crowded tenements of New-York. BELMONT BUYS LAND.

Purchase in Long Island City to Carry Out Tunnel Plans.

A contract was closed yesterday by which August Belmont became the owner of a two story brick building at Vernon-ave, and 4th-st., Long Island City, and a three story flathouse in 4th-st. and a vacant lot between the two. The ner property brought $30,000, the flathouse $15,000 and the vacant lot $7,500. The prices are the highest ever paid for property in the Hunter's Point ection of Long Island City. It is said by real estate men that Mr. Belmont had to have the property to carry out his tunnel plans and the wners made him pay big for it.

The corner building blocks the entrance to the new bridge over Newtown Creek, which has cost the city $1,000,000. The space at the entrance of the bridge is so narrow that the heavy traffic over the structure must be almost continually blockaded. Besides the city has given the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company permission to run its cars over the bridge and must provide room for the tracks at the bridge entrance and cannot do now unless Mr. Belmont is willing that some of his ewly acquired property shall be taken.

The tunnel company needs only the corner for the purpose of building the tunnel under it, and the use of the surface by the city would not interfere with the tunnel. Mr. Belmont, it is reported, is willing that the city should take some of the land for a larger entrance to the bridge. As the prop-erty has been obtained for railroad purposes it cannot be condemned, and the city will have to get it by purchase. by purchase. Belmont in buying the property made certain

Mr. Belmont in buying the property made certain that the passenger entrance to his tunnels should be in the best location, and as he has about half of the block he can obtain the remainder, and in doing so will take the building occupied by the Long Island City postoffice as well as the building leased by the city for a borough hall. The Belmont interests have purchased the William Susdorf farm at Woodside and have options on other large plots there, which is taken to show that the entrance to that tunnel will be near the entrance to the Pennsylvania tunnel.
